

S.M. Koffier

Mrs Anna C. Cabral

Chief, P.O.B. Unit No. 13

607 rue Francisco Leitao, 607

APO-759 c/o Postmaster,

See Photo

BRAZIL

February 13, 1944

My Dearest Anita, I have returned today from a most wonderful trip into the interior of Morocco and when I arrived at my office I found another one of your letters waiting for me. It was dated 17th of January, which is relatively recent. I hope by this time you have seen my extracts and my previous letters as well. Your ocards make me smile, with jerkos sy. Do let me use the few lines of this letter to tell you of my trip. As I've written before I have very little time to myself since I have come here and have been working day and night & most fantastic hours on stretch you could imagine. Well I needed a rest. And the other day we decided to go to the mountains. The beauty & splendor of the Riff in Morocco and the British & American Kestrels. We spent the day in the hills & came home in the evening on a trip and I went along with them. I have now got a wonderful colorful story of Britain for the next day & we spent a little more time in town, the mountains being my constant's topic. Any day I will add to it. Also a colorful account of the mountains and how they look for the first time in many years ago. I will write of you again "now or the time" doing nothing all day and I thought to myself as I sat in the sun free for at least two days. (I am now 11/15 in Brazil) but the P.O.C. is giving me a day in London for you. I wonder if you are listening at this very moment. I usually sit around in my office and listen to the wireless news, which I do not hear better, even tho, I don't get as much sleep that I'd like to get back to my bed. I have written to you of my impressions of the world in which I now live and you expect on me. The landscape, however, that open by us on Friday afternoon was different. There was still the red earth, but this time the green were dominant, for we passed miles after miles of rolling green hillsides, hills that are ideal pasturage upon which sheep, cows, horses and goats lounge around while an Arab reclines beneath leaning beside the tree in the shade. I think I am a child, but sitting out into the open again, not surrounded by houses and streets and buildings on all sides seemed so free my body and soul as I felt like singing. I actually did begin to hum to myself, until I was told to shut up. I did with regret. Capt Keates and Packard had already been to Fez and Seville before so that this trip was one more of business than of pleasure. I was the only tourist in this little army. Suddenly the flat, green land disappeared and I found we were climbing rapidly. We spun around and twisted up steep hills, with razor back edges, a dip of the wheel and we were over the side. We didn't though. And then when we had just reached the top I stopped short, or so it seemed, for in front of us, rising high high to meet a mountain chain - the Atlas and the Ouarsenis on its peak shone the smooth, clean whiteness of fresh snow! My first snow since I had come to Africa. I felt transformed with joy and freedom. To our left loomed another mountain chain the Riff, less imposing, but more regal of Moroccan history. The Rif recalls to my mind a group of Arab riders, armed with long rifles, riding against the Spanish, the Portuguese and the French afterwards in their intervening period with contention. But we kept steadily onward toward Fez and Marrakesh. The route we were taking was beautiful in itself, at times it would be shaded by foliage leaning very thickly over the route, rich leafy branches that reminded one of the straight well tended roads of France.... other times one strange reason which I have not yet been able to discover caused the authorities or the tribes to calculate to the branches, leaving only a naked trunk, with sawed-off branches, which extended knobly, stub-like fingers toward the heavens. It was a sad picture, and a little a scene to put on a card. So we were going some here. And I kept thinking in my mind some fantastic picture of Fez that my friend back home had given me before I had left for Africa, a vision of sand they had known no one then personally, like a child to us.

then years ago. I looked forward April 1. (I'll cont. next sheet) a set of odors all its own. I entered the Medina Saturday morning for the first time in Fez with an official guide. Though I am usually against going along with guides I felt it might be advisable in this instance until I got to know the way around and wouldn't get myself inextricably lost.

It is now a little after 9 pm. I have been listening to Radio Nacional Rio de Janeiro, Brasil - PLR-3, on 11,710 kilocycles. It has been coming in as strong as a whip and as clear as a whistle, not the slightest bit of static or distortion. This evening they played a good assortment of Brazilian records, which is all I really want them to do. There was "Malandrinha", "Serrana" and "Sou Louco". So far I haven't yet heard "Brasil" during my moments at the receiver, but I presume they have played it many times during the times when I am unable to listen.

But let's see if we can't get ourselves into and out of the Medina.

The Medina as I was saying is a very strange place indeed. I entered it in the morning. Narrow cobble streets along which shoved and pushed, laden donkeys, mules, Arab men in their dirty babouches, horses, Arab women, barefoot children and just mobs of people moving with and against you. In spite of the filth which is everywhere and the poverty which too is almost everywhere to be seen, there is a charm about the Medina. I get the biggest thrill just wandering about the different shops, watching the artisans practising their art out in their open stalls, or the open food markets and the crowds that gather to get a good price. When you walk into one of the bazaars, the Arab shopkeeper's eyes light up and twinkle and before he gives you his hand him he reads them together briskly in happy anticipation. The American uniform seems to give terrible transformations on them. They will spread big thick rugs before you, show you every piece of embroidery they have, display their leather goods before you, their bags, their babouches, their jewelry and quote fantastic prices. People who have been to Morocco before we arrived say that prices have risen here in all articles, at least 100%. An article that formerly sold for 10 francs is now well priced at 100 or often 1.0 and 2.0 franc. While I was in Fez I purchased a little, buying a few things which I think you may like. I am sending them to you as soon as I can pack them properly. I also got my sisters some little things and my brother and father. By the time I had left Fez I had a fairly large sized package and a fairly costly purse. But there was a real joy in buying those little things.

I went shopping Saturday afternoon with an Arab friend and in one of the souks the owner invited me to have tea with him which I reluctantly accepted and while he exposed his beautiful objects we sipped tea with mint leaves. My friend also took out the long Arab hookah pipe and passed it on to the others in the shop and we think of our sacrifice in India and the hookah-pipe.

Thinking the American Indians has brought Levi Strauss to mind. I often wonder what he is doing, and where he has gotten in his career in his relation to his profession. I really like the Ecole Libre and the New School, who knows whether I'll ever get the chance to go back to my studies. Here in Africa I have no time to do much but work all the time. Studying of course is absolutely out of the question. My just reading a novel takes ages. I still haven't finished War and Peace, though I have gotten almost to the end. I should say that the novel assumes stature as it proceeds. At kids at age I look forward eagerly to the few moments in the evening when I can continue my reading.

It is now 11:30 pm I should go home. London is on the air now to Brazil with their concert. I see that this letter really rambles. Do you find it boring?

Here it is the 19th already and I still haven't mailed this letter. I'd better throw this into the letter box and start another one tomorrow or the day after. In that way you'll keep getting my letters.

So long sweetheart, keep writing to me. I have now received a whole pile of your letters.

Mrs Anna de Grubito & wife, Mrs
C. A. D. R. A.

607 rue Francisco Lobo

AFO-759 c/o Postmaster 30

S. Paulo, BRAZIL

February 13, 1944

PAGE TWO

Cebrita, It is now February 14th, since it is not mini lit. But let us continue from my previous letter. I'd got to P.O.

Finally after several hours riding we slowly turned a curve and there in front of us was a strange city, with numerous minarets stretching upwards like so many peg snafu which till now P.M., the military capital of Morocco and one of the centers of Moslem culture. There was something about this which I liked me. This was not the first Arabic city I was seeing and yet something about this seemed to serve a different & more strange setting here, surpassing my imagination. We approached the city (there of course too - the Bedouin and the Europeans, only the former really worthy of interest), the walls which surround the city loomed before us. The walls were thick and brown before them, the windows that gleamed in the sun, the crooked, zig-zag like curvings along the edges all received pictures of their white and pinkish tinted buildings as they receded flooded into my audience imagination. Our car being crowded another surge, and this time a grey dust from my lungs. Far ahead mountains, but now no more and a chain of mountains. On the right the Atlas range as far as the distance, consisting of standing on its back as you do not see again. In the left side of the city, for the first time we saw, but always the jewel of far gave it a most faint and pleasant. I am riding on the edge of the road, and driving my nose for a kind of different odors to mix the阿拉伯香料, and then, our horn honking loudly we reached the Grand Place before Kasbah, whose gate is richly decorated, carved in worn stone of sandstone, a Richardson here the frame for a sparkling sea of Arab men and women in robes, running and jumping through the gates into that myst by which it is hidden behind. I didn't notice this nor any other so skirted the perimeter, we rode past the open market places, where people go to buy, where ~~houses~~ houses and goods are put up for sale, where the mountaineers go down from their hills to trade and bargain. Here it must have been, too, that the same women were sent off to the last bidder. We rode on. Our final goal was our hotel, again we seemed to leave the city. I asked: "A what is at P.O. ?" "We leaving?" I am hooked to the fence as will to look at the city as it began to reflect its own reflection when P.O. was rising up hill, circling around a sharp point in front of the hotel for the Tower of Pisa Hotel. At every turn, a different panoramic of the city reflected itself. And soon, I shouted, we stopped down, we stopped. I jumped out of the car and breathing in a fresh draught of clean pure air passed over on a series of white cube-shaped little houses, all of which seemed to be intertwined with one another. A jungle of the Kasbah, impenetrable, secret, hiding who knows what surprises, and secretive practices. Get back into the car, the boys yelled before we push you over the cliff. with that terrible warning I hopped back to my seat. The motor gave a few choking turns and caught and on he rolled again. Up we climbed until after a good dozen hair-pin turns we zoomed out before a crowded walled castle. This was our hotel, the Kasbah, former home of an Arab Sultan and his numerous and well-tried harem - who had arrived at P.O. We crawled out dragging our weighty bags, our saddlebags, and trunks onto the sand followed by two comrades as they descended a row of winding steps (everything birds here it seems) and finally we came out upon a patio or garden of some kind. The floors were made of large tiles, and mosaiques (I suppose Rio is better but I don't know), an oriental marble receptacle filled with water, gave living space to a group of piccid-looking goldfish, swimming their way around. It was cold enough to be cool, the leaves of the palms that swayed here took good care of that. We immediately throughout a nap out on the veranda and I did not stay.

And then on August 8th, 1940 the Battle of Britain began. Day after day, the Nazis hurled their fleets of bombers and planes against England in concentrated series of day attacks. The aim of the enemy was to achieve a quick death blow and thus bring a rapid decision and the end of the war in the Autumn or early winter of 1940. This was to be the big knockout blow of all. Squadrons of Junkers, Heinkels, Bemiers flew off to the attack convoys at sea and the Southeast ports of Portland, Plymouth, Dover and other strategic points. This was to prepare for the land offensive and invasion of Britain itself. The RAF went up to meet the Germans and the enemy reeled back from the stinging blows. The Germans threw in more air fleets and the more that came over England the more the Spitfire and Hurricane crews knocked down. "Achtung, Schpitfeuer!" came to be a terrifying signal to the German air crews to prepare for their doom.....On September 15th, 1940, the Royal Air Force blasted down 175 Nazi planes. A plane shot down every two or three kilometers. Between August 8th and October 31st, at least 2375 German planes were destroyed..

I did not know all this then, but there was hope still, though very little, in my heart as I prepared to leave Nazi-occupied France and return to the United States. Across Spain I flitted quickly. The pitiful poverty of the country appalled me - who had just come from France. I ran still in ruins, its buildings still nothing but hollow hulks years after the war. And then I crossed into Portugal, where for the first time in my life I began to hear Portuguese spoken. I understand not a word of it. The little bit of Spanish I then knew was hopeless. But the bread was white, there was fish, and meat and eggs aplenty. There was light here and relative freedom. In Lisbon, I came across my first issue of the free French newspaper printed in London by DeGaulle. A chill of joy ran across my whole being but the Portuguese intrigued me. That language was totally foreign to me - to me who considered myself a Romance language and literature expert. And as my boat sailed from the docks of the Tejo and I waved goodbye to the Rocio, Cascais, and the few friends that I had made during my short stay in Lisbon, I swore that my second letter to Portugal would be written in the língua de Camões.

All these fantastic ideas raced through my head as I sat on the terrace of the Jardim in Fcs, oblivious of my newsletters, of flashes, of letters to write, of the war of everything but this past that I was suddenly reliving. Isn't the human mind strange indeed? I thought of you then, afterwards, somewhere in São Paulo (it was late afternoon or early afternoon where you were) and I wondered what you were doing at that very moment....

The next day I went into the medina to do some shopping and wander around the Arab souks and gaze at their merchandise and see what they wanted for the things they displayed on sale. An Arab Medina is a strange place indeed. It is unique in itself and has

1/14/48

S.M. Koffler

110-1000-1

Chief, P.W.P. Unit No. 10

Washington

APO-759 c/o Postmaster, NY

Miss Anita G. Cabral

607 rua Francisco Leitao, 607

Sao Paulo

BRAZIL

February 13, 1948

PAGE ONE

My Dearest Anita, I have returned today from a most wonderful trip into the interior of Morocco and when I arrived at my office I found another one of your letters waiting for me. It was dated 17th of January, which is relatively recent. I hope by this time you have found my estrella and my previous letters as well. Your ciudadade made me smile, with jealo ey. But let me use the few lines of this letter to tell you of my trip. As I've written before I had had very little time to myself since I have come here and have been working day and night the most fantastic hours on stretch you could imagine. Well I needed a rest. And the other day an occasion presented itself. The Deputy Director of the PWD in Morocco and a British Captain named Keates who works with us were both going into Fes and Melnes on a trip and I went along with them. I had prepared a special feature story on Lincoln for the next day & so felt a little more secure in leaving the whole operation in my assistant's hands. Anyway I left this town with a clear conscience and sat back and breathed freely for the first time in many many weeks. I did think of you spending your "summer vacation" doing nothing all day and I laughed inwardly as I realized that I too was free for at least two days. (It is now 11:45 pm (7:45 in Brasil) and the BBC is giving the news in Brazilian for you. I wonder if you are listening at this very moment. I usually stick around in my office and listen to the Brazilian programs since it makes me feel better, even tho, I don't get as much sleep that we have to get back to my trip. I have written to you of my impressions of the land in which I now live and its effect on me. The landscape, however, that sped by us on Friday afternoon was different. There was still the red earth, but this time the greens were dominating, for we passed mile after mile of rolling green tablelands, hills that are ideal pasturelands and on which sheep, cows, horses and goats bounce around while an Arab reclines nonchalantly beneath a tree in the shade. Perhaps I am a child, but getting out into the open again, not surrounded by houses and streets and buildings on all sides seemed to free my body and soul & I felt like singing. I actually did begin to hum loudly, until I was told to shut up. I did, with regret. Capt Keates and Puckett had already been to Fes and Melnes before on that this trip was one more of business than of pleasure. I was the only tourist in this little party. Suddenly the flat, green land disappeared and I found we were climbing rapidly. We spun around twisted in steep hills, with razor back edged; a slip of the wheel and we were over the side. He didn't though. And then when we had just reached the top I stopped short, or so it seemed, for in front of us, rising high high loomed a mountain chain - the Atlas and the snow its peaks show the smooth, clean whiteness of fresh snow since I had come to Africa. I felt transformed with joy and freedom. To our left loomed another mountain chain the Riff, less imposing, but more pregnant of Moroccan history. The Riff recalled to my mind a group of Arab riders, armed with long rifles riding against the Spanish, the Portuguese and the French afterwards in their interminable war against domination. But we kept going onward toward Fes and Melnes. The road we were using was beautiful in itself, at times it would be shaded by foliage hanging very thickly over the route, rich leafy branches had remained one of the straight well tamed roads of France.... other times some strange reason which I have not yet been able to discover prompted the authorities or the Arabs to mutilate the branches, leaving only a naked trunk, with sawed-off branches, which extended hobby, stub-like fingers toward the heavens. It was a sad picture, and a little awesome too at on we sped. We were going somewhere. And I kept twirling in my mind some fantastic picture of Fes that my friends back home had given me before I had left for Africa, a vision of land they had known more than merrily, like a child to our ther

arrive

Created with

nitroPDF

professional

download the free trial online at nitropdf.com/professional

(See Remarks of Mrs. Pauline E. Tomia concerning her handwriting and name as contained in the space above. This is a copy of the original V-mail letter sent to her from the U.S. Army Air Forces)

To
Mrs. Pauline E. Tomia
1225 White Plains Road
Bronx, New York

(CENSOR'S STAMP)

S.M. Koffler
Chief, P.W.B.
[Signature]
Unit No. 10
APO-759
[Signature]
c/o Postmaster, N.Y.

February 14, 1944
(B.M.)

Dearest Paul,

A number of your letters have come rolling in at once and I have ~~not~~ had a chance to reply at all, what with work and things. But your poems and chitchat is very entertaining. Keep it up. I like the series idea of your V-mails. But one of these days I'm going to get letter three before two as I did with some woman's letters. She had the brilliant idea of writing a twelve page letter on Vmails. Well I got number 7 first and the whole thing all mixed up. In addition she scribbled in tiny print. It was impossible to read after being read. Our letters are not folded because of our location doesn't have any apparatus.

I keep getting a pile of letters from him

V MAIL

Created with

nitroPDF professional
download the free trial online at nitropdf.com/professional

11.11.2
S.M. Koffler

Chief, P.W.B. Unit No. 10

11.11.2

APO-759 c/o Postmaster NY

Miss Annita De Castilho e Marcondes
C A B R A L

607 rua Francisco Leitao

Sao Paulo, BRAZIL

February 13, 1944

PAGE TWO

Cabrita, It is now February 14th, since it is past midnight. But let us continue from my previous letter. Let's get to FES.

Finally after several hours riding we finally turned a curve and there in front of me rose a strange city, with numerous minarets sticking upwards like so many peppermint sticks. This was FES, the religious capital of Morocco and one of the centers of Moorish culture. There was something about Fes which fascinates me. This was not the first Arabic city I was seeing and yet something within me seemed to sense a different a more strange setting here, surrounded by mountains. As we approached the cities (there of course two - the Medina and the European, only the former really worthy of interest), the walls which enclosed the Medina loomed before us. The wide spaces that opened before them, the whiteness that gleamed in the sun, the crenelated, zig-zag like carvings along the edges all recalled pictures of Beau Geste and visions of ancient battles on the parapets flooded into my awakened imagination. Our car swung around another curve, and this time a gasp came from my lungs. Fes was sheltered between two massive chains of mountains. On the right the Atlas range and far in the distance, something was gleaming on its peaks - yes it was snow again. We had lost sight of the Mts. for some time. This new view, set among the jewel of Fes gave it a new light and splendor. I was sitting on the edge of my seat, and craning my neck for all kinds of different angles to view the surroundings from. And then, our horn honking loudly we rolled into the Grande Place before Fes itself. Huge portals richly decorated, carved and worn features of sunning and windburning were the frame for a seething mass of Arab men and women walking, running and limping through its gates into that mystery which its Medina holds. We didn't enter with our car. Rather we skirted the parapets, we rode past the open market places, where camels are sold in pairs, where fatif horses and gowds are put up for sale, where the mountaineers come down from their hills to trade and bargain. Here it must have been, too, that the harem women were auctioned off to the best bidder. We rode on. Our first goal was our hotel. Again we seemed to leave the city. I asked "Aren't we at Fes? Why are we leaving?" I was hushed into silence and told to look at the city as it began to unfold itself from another view. Now we were rolling uphill, curving around a sharp mountain road as if we were headed for the Tower of Babel Hotel. At every turn, a different panorama of the city presented itself. Slow down, I shouted. We slowed down. We stopped. I jumped out of the car and breathing in a fresh draught of clean pure air peered down on a mosaic of white cube-shaped little houses, all of which seemed to be intertwined with one another. A jungle of the Kasbah, impenetrable, secret, hiding who knows what intrigue, and secretive practices. Get back into the car, the boys yelled before we push you over the cliff. With that terrible warning I leaped back to my seat. The motor gave a few choking turns and caught and on we rolled again. Up we climbed until after a good dozen hair-pin turns we zoomed out before a crenelated walled castle. This was our hotel. Le PALAIS DE JAHAF, former home of an Arab Sultan and his numerous and well tried harem women. We had arrived at Fes. We tumbled out dragging our musette bags, our mufflebags, and trenchcoats and, somewhat dazed followed my two comrades as they descended a row of winding steps (everything winds here it seems) and finally we came out upon a patio or garden of some kind. The floors we walked on were richly tiled, and mosaiced (I suppose Rio is better but I don't know), an oriental marble receptacle filled with water, gave living space to a group of placid-looking goldfish, paddling their way around. It was shady enough to be cool, the leaves of the palms that swayed here took good care of that. We immediately there race and I was swept away.

I'll

Created with

 nitro PDF professional

download the free trial online at nitropdf.com/professional

February 14, 1944

Dear Irv:

Your letter dated January 22nd came yesterday, another letter which I had addressed to you at 545-5th Avenue came back as you predicted. I had sent it to you before your letter telling me not to. I certainly feel good to know and turn to try to make out your handwriting, practically makes me fell I'm back home again. How the hell are you making out by now. Hope that your next letter will tell another story about Beatrice. She sounds swell. Thanks for the note bout Brazil and the Nat. Geographic Mag. I've written to Schweb and asked for the issue as well as other books and stuff which I need very much for our operation on the events of Spain and Portugal. I asked him to supply me with any books which have appeared on the Spanish situation or stuff on Brazil etc. If you're still around the office when you get this, drop in and see me and tell me that I want and see if he can arrange to supply me regularly via diplomatic pouch with most of the material I need.

Then in your letter you spoke of planning to get married. I thought that at long last you had become sensible. But apparently the inclination is both sided. Because if I really wanted to get married with a woman and she wouldn't I would make it my business to get her married to me. But there I go talking in a sick. I have been receiving many letters from people in São Paulo, wonderful letters. One has of a girl won the first prize in that competition she took part in last year, and has just come back and the Chair of Psychology. Anita who has sent me a number of books to keep me up with the "joneses" in the latest of Brazilian literature. I have fallen horribly behind however, in spite of all that and in case any I feel like it, staying over to get into "it" work on Brazil if I ever do manage to get back to it at all.

I'm still working pretty hard, and the heat is getting worse. However, I have managed to tone myself down a little. Just the other day I decided I needed a rest and so rode out for a couple of days to two cities in the interior of Brazil, Rio and Santos. I had a swell time there and spent a pretty heavy sum of cash but I really had a good time and it was worth it. Rio is quite different from the city I live in and I thoroughly enjoyed wandering around the Arab section, for hours, going into the different shops and cheap and buying all kinds of little and big things which I thought Anita or my sisters might like. Prices are not inexpensive but so much of what for sale is no good that it is hard to resist spending everything you have in those shapes. Oddly enough if you go along, the very fact that you have an American uniform on is out to raise the price of the objects at least two or three times. I am a little fortunate in that I know people in those towns and had some Arab friends go with me and usually felt I had got a fairly good buy.

Mil Rothberg and I separated soon after we both arrived in Africa. He is now with our Oran office of the P&E and I understand doing a pretty useful and interesting job. Little Sammy Goldstein, returned to the States soon after we got here. His wife it appears did not really recover from that accident. Remained. Woesley? Boy what a nut he turned out to be! Wooly Joeley they call him. He was sent to Italy and got himself kicked around there he was always complaining. The last I heard of him he was back at our main Headq. offices. Lou Klotz is still as bubbly as ever. He was here for a while and we had a little fun together. Then he got himself shipped into Italy I think, but I'm not sure. Anyway he's not here anymore.

There is not much more I have time to write in this letter. You should see me riding around in my car. I don't have a jeep but I do have a Ford Coupe and a tiny Simca or Italian Fiat, the vest-pocket size kind. I get a big kick driving it around.

Tell you mug, I'll sign off here, and hope to hear from you soon again. I'll try to drop you another letter, soon.

P.W.B. Unit No. 10

APO 750

March 1st, 1944

My Dearest Annita,

This has been an eventful week of war news, and things have also happened here in North Africa and in Morocco. First of all it has rained - as I have rarely seen it rain. Day after day this week, it poured, and came down in veritable buckets and sheets - tropical rain. As it poured here, I thought of you in Brasil, and your dry summer, and I thought of your vacation and wondered how you had spent it. You are probably preparing to return to your work now that your summer is drawing to a close.

For some time now, I haven't received any letters from you - but your previous ones tell me of packages and things which are on their way, so that I am patient and hopeful.

This week too, I instituted a change in my living ways. Instead of eating in the French restaurants here, I have decided to eat at least one of my meals with the American Army mess. This means that I have to leave the office at 5 pm every day to have dinner (the Army eats much earlier than the French or even the Brazilians, if I remember correctly) in the little clump of woods where the camp is located just outside of town. It means leaving the office in the afternoon, but I prefer to do this and have a really good American meal, and then come back in about half-hour. This enables me to catch up with my work. But it gives me a very important other advantage. I don't have to go out to dinner at 7:30 or 8 pm. This permits me to tune in on Radio Nacional, Rio de Janeiro. Every day I have been picking up PLR-3 on 11,720 kilocycles in its broadcast to Portugal. It makes me feel wonderful to be able to listen to Brazil every evening - and naturally my thoughts are with you. Just now it is 8:15, and as you might expect, I'm turned in to Rio de Janeiro. They've just finished playing "VIDA APENADA" - and the singer moans "Trabalho nao tenho nada..." Wish I could say the same thing. They've also played a couple of real Brazilian sambas which make me very sad and happy at the same time. When I hear those songs, I feel a terrible "saudade" for Brazil and wonder when I'll be there. The station has suddenly switched to Cuban rumbas - "PARAMPAMPAM" and "UNO DOS TRES, UMPH". At 8:30 the English portion of the program begins, directed toward the British Isles. The first number which has just begun is entitled: "Coracao que bateu domais" . But enough of music for the while.

As I told you this week it rained, and this is very good for the crops and the food situation of Morocco. But it made me pretty wet. To make things more interesting for me, my car broke down. The valve of the inner tube snapped off & I almost ruined the tire. As it is my car is still not running. Some water must have gotten into the wires or something. Anyway it's back in the garage. That car practically lives there. ?

We have been having some tricks here in North Africa. Before the arrival of the Americans, and during the reign (of terror) of Vichy, the Fascist under-dogs of Hitler and Vichy decided to repay those anti-fascists who had dared to fight for freedom and liberty, either in France (with the Foreign Legion) or in Spain on the side of the legitimate Republican by filling their concentration camps in the Sahara Desert. And so the name of Colombe Becker became a symbol of French fascism active in North Africa. The butcher-leader's of the camps and their intendents - the Colonels Impy, Vicibet, and the thug-faced Finidore, Sentuck, Dourmanoff, Riepp, Trece, Dotti, Nocca and Sillier, enjoyed themselves by brutal beatings of Spaniards and other anti-fascists. But beatings were not enough, they were not satisfied, in true Nazi fashion, with the mere sight of a badly broken body. More was necessary. The "disciplinary camps" were set up. When a man went in he never walked out.. he was carried out - dead. As the judge of the proceedings declared in his summing up: "Au nom de la societe comme au nom de la France martyre et resisteante, ce precese depasse les torionnaires. Il doit etre la condamnation de doctrines barbares